

The Postdoctoral Fellowship in Food and Nutrition Ethics

Invites applications for a two-year funded postdoctoral fellowship to begin in September 2016

Applications due December 15th, 2015

The Johns Hopkins Berman Institute of Bioethics is pleased to announce a specialized postdoctoral fellowship in the area of food, agriculture and nutrition ethics. This two year post-doctoral fellowship seeks a new fellow to begin September 2016. The main goal of the fellowship is to launch the career of a bioethics scholar, with a focus on ethical issues and controversies of the global food system and its implications on food security, as well as human health and nutrition in developed and developing countries. This fellow will be part of the cohort of the Berman Institute's Hecht-Levi Fellowship Program, with special focus on Johns Hopkins' 7 x 5 Global Food Ethics Initiative, within the Global Food Ethics and Policy Program of the Berman Institute of Bioethics in collaboration with the Nitze School of Advanced International Studies.

The Fellowship provides a two-year postdoctoral position that includes:

- Weekly seminars, presentations and discussions with the leading academic and policy makers;
- Individualized research program;
- Bioethics coursework through the Berman Institute's Master in Bioethics program;
- Post-doctoral mentoring in bioethics;
- Professional development training;
- Participation in the Berman Institute's outreach efforts via social media;
- Teaching opportunities (commensurate with experience and background);
- A total financial package for two years of $55,000 per year, plus individual health insurance and other benefits;
- A modest discretionary fund for travel to relevant conferences.

Please send a cover letter, CV, three letters of reference, copy of graduate transcript, a writing sample, and a personal statement to:
